20th July 1928.

Dear Miss Bell,

I am directed to write and invite you to give a course of lectures on Public Speaking to the Summer School for International Students which is being held at the present time at Bedford College. Miss Dorsey has, I believe, already spoken to you about this matter and arranged with you to give your lectures on July 27th, 30th 31st, and August 1st and 2nd, provided there are sufficient students who desire to attend the course. It is understood that you will not accept a class of more than 20 students at a time (though you would be willing to undertake the work with a minimum of 6 or 7 students) and that your fee is £1.1.0, per student for the course of five lectures.

It is hoped that you will accept this invitation on the terms stated.

You will be hearing from Miss Dorsey shortly as to the number of students who wish to enter for the course.

Yours truly,

Secretary.
