So Soon Out of Date?

As one young sister tutor sighed the other day, "One so soon gets out of date!" But need one? The provinces are bristling with post-graduate courses, and the College caters splendidly for London and its environs. Some of the visits, too, do not easily come the way of the ordinary nurse. Take, for instance, the visit to the Ford works at Dagenham, to the new Pioneer Health Centre which is being opened as we go to press, the inspection of a Cunard liner in the King George V dock, or the demonstration of the teletactor and other apparatus for the training of deaf and apparently deaf-mute children at the Infants Hospital. (We have already discussed this last department in two recent issues of our journal.) Then those who have contributed to the Florence Nightingale International Foundation will be sure to want to see Bedford College and the house in Manchester Square where the international students live. Finally, we have all heard so much about Drinker respirators and such that probably we could draw them with our eyes shut. Yet how many of us have actually seen one? Messrs. Siebe, Gorman and Co., Ltd., are demonstrating their special appliances for artificial respiration on the second Wednesday.
