

An interesting collection of varied goods, gifts from thirty-six countries, is now passing through the British Customs in preparation for the British Red Cross Society's international bazaar which is to be held at the Central Hall, Westminster, S.W.1, on July 7 and 8. The bazaar is in aid of the Florence Nightingale International Foundation, which has its headquarters in London, and which constitutes a permanent memorial to Florence Nightingale in the form of an endowed trust for post-graduate scholarships providing advanced courses of nursing at Bedford College. The special training given by the foundation includes courses dealing with public health administration and teaching in schools of nursing, and social work, for women who have had the best nursing training available in their own countries.

British Medical Journal.

26.6.37