22nd May 1929

Dear Miss Monkhouse,

I have been away on sick leave for the last three weeks and only returned yesterday when Miss Rundle handed me your letter of the 17th referring to the fees for International students. She asked me to send a revised list with explanations.

Tropical Diseases Last year the fee for the course was £2: 2: 0 and not 1 guinea as stated in your letter. This year it was found possible to reduce the fee to £1: 8: 0.

Principles of Education The lectures and practical demonstrations have been considerably increased since 1926, when I note that the number of lectures given in the course was 6, together with a certain number of practical classes. The fee for the course of 16 lectures and approximately 26 practice classes is now £1: 13: 4d, as the course is now extended throughout the greater part of two terms, whereas formerly it was only of one term's duration.

Last year alterations were made in the account for Bedford College after it left the Education Department and I was not informed of these changes until the account had been sent in, otherwise the fee for this course of lectures, i.e. Principles of Education, should have been the same as this year. I am so sorry that these difficulties have arisen and that some delay has occurred owing to my foolishness in contracting chicken-pox.

I also note that a charge of £15^{per student} was made in respect of the 10 Hospital Administration students; this should have been £15: 15: 0.

This session, for the first time, a reduction was made for College members, and I ascertained which of the International students were also members of the College before making out the account. I have since been informed that this reduction does not extend to Bedford College students and that the full fee will be charged for all Bedford College students attending the College of Nursing.

I hope I have made this clear. Perhaps you would like to see me when I am up at Bedford College on Friday afternoon or would ring me up on the telephone for further explanations.

Yours sincerely,

G. M. Jones

Secretary to the Education Department

I have been very busy since I returned from the International Conference of the I.N.M. in London. I have sent a revised list with explanations.

This year it was found possible to reduce the fee to £1: 0: 0 and not £1: 0: 0 as stated in your letter. The fee for the course of 18 lectures and approximately 150 practice classes is now £1: 15: 0. The fee for the course has now been extended throughout the greater part of two terms, whereas formerly it was only of one term's duration.

The lecturers and practical demonstrations have been considerably increased since 1928. I note that the number of lectures given in the course was 6, together with a certain number of practical classes. The fee for the course of 18 lectures and approximately 150 practice classes is now £1: 15: 0. The fee for the course has now been extended throughout the greater part of two terms, whereas formerly it was only of one term's duration.

Last year alterations were made in the account for Bedford College after it left the Education Department and I was not informed of these changes until the account had been sent in, otherwise the fee for this course of lectures, i.e. Lectures of Education, should have been the same as this year. I am so sorry that these difficulties have arisen and that some delay has occurred owing to my foolishness in comparing this year's account with the account for last year.

I also note that a change of £15 was made in respect of the 100% of the International students; this should have been £15: 0: 0.

This matter, for the first time, a student was made for College members, and I ascertained which of the International students were also members of the College before making out the account. I have since been informed that this reduction does not extend to Bedford College students and that the fee will be charged for all Bedford College students attending
